Orthodox Court Set Up To Preserve Marriage Ties

A religious court, or Beth Din, has been formed in New York, by the Orthodox rabbinate of America, to guide and counsel Jews having problems in marriage, divorce, and family relationships. The establishment of the court was announced at the headquarters of the Rabbinical Council of America, 84 Fifth Avenue. The Council represents 785 rabbis serving 1,000,000 Jews in the United States and Canada.

As things are now in the U.S., couples desiring a "Get" (divorce) may obtain one only after a rabbi calls together two other clergymen in an ad hoc tribunal to hear the case and to hand down a bill of divorce. This said, Rabbi Emanuel Rackman, has resulted in "anarchy and misrepresentation." The court's first aim is to "preserve the marriage ties," he emphasized, reports the New York Herald Tribune.

Also, he said, the rise in the civil divorce rate and the "growing strength" of Orthodox Jewry have resulted in establishment of a centralized Beth Din of the type that has functioned for years in Great Britain, France, and Germany. The Beth Din, incorporated in New York State, will have the function of arbitrator up to the point where courts take over in, for example, the matter of civil divorce.

The Beth Din will receive referrals from local community rabbis, provide a central registry of vital statistics on marriages and divorces available to rabbis all over the world, and serve as an information center for attorneys wishing details on Jewish law as it might affect their clients.

The court will function largely in advance of the civil authorities. Its major responsibility will be in the fields of guidance and counseling in relation to Orthodox Jewish Law. Heretofore such guidance has been the responsibility of individual rabbis. The new court will draw on consultants in civil law, sociology, psychiatry, and religion, says the New York Times. Fees will be charged only to families able to pay.

The Beth Din will sit in a "courtroom" at the Council's Fifth Avenue offices and will be convened as often as necessary. It is hoped that more courts can be established in Chicago, Los Angeles, and Baltimore in the near future.

The Orthodox Beth Din is similar to a marriage court set up early in 1959 by the leaders of Conservative Judaism. Both courts will serve couples from all three branches of Judaism: Reform, Conservative, and Orthodox. Rabbi Emanuel Rackman, former president of the Council, and religious leader of Congregation Shaaray Tefila, Far Rockaway, Queens, is the court's first president. Gustav Stern, a philanthropist whose support made the court possible, is chairman of the board of directors.

Israel Says Morocco To Blame For Death Of 42 Jews At Sea

Israel charged the Government of Morocco with "heavy responsibility" for the tragedy in which forty-two Moroccan Jews were drowned in a clandestine attempt to flee to Israel. Foreign Minister Golda Meir made the charge in the Knesset (Parliament) in reply to motions by six members for debate on the matter. The drownings occurred on January 11 when a motor launch capsized in a storm off the Moroccan coast.

"The rulers of Morocco bear a heavy responsibility for the tragedy," Mrs. Meir declared, according to the New York Times. "Fear and insecurity, physical and spiritual, pervade the atmosphere among the quarter million Jews in Morocco. It was not surprising that they tried to escape with their lives to join their dear ones in Israel. They escaped with full awareness of the dangers awaiting them but the Moroccan authorities left them with no alternative."

The captain of the ship that sank off Alhucemas Bay was questioned by Moroccan authorities. The pilot was identified as Francisco Morilla Reinaldo, a Spaniard. He was the skipper of the craft, the twenty-seven-ton former British vessel Price, on which, except for himself and two crew members, all aboard were drowned.

The vessel, not much larger than the average party fishing boat that sails out of Sheepshead Bay in Brooklyn, N.Y., flew the Honduras flag and had been based in Gibraltar. Captain Reinaldo disclaimed any knowledge about the nationality of his passengers. He confirmed that the Price left the sea-coast town of Melilla with Gibraltar as her destination, says the New York Times. As to the passengers, he said, Captain Reinaldo said they had been "on a Mediterranean cruise."

However, Moroccan officials contended that in Gibraltar the passengers were to have been transferred to a ship sailing for Israel. When the Price was forty miles west of Melilla she ran into a storm. She was driven onto the rocks at Cape Moro Nuevo and the ship's prow was split.

The captain said he had warned the passengers of the danger and "they hurriedly put on lifebelts and jumped into the sea." He said many had not known how to swim and they had been unable to handle their lifebelts in the rough water.

Rescue vessels and a plane from Gibraltar searched for the wreckage. After the plane sighted bodies floating ten miles east of Alhucemas, fishing boats picked up twenty-one of the drowned, says the New York Times. A previous report, attributed to Moroccan sources, said the immigrants had been trying to re-enter Morocco without passports. The same sources later changed their story.

Moroccan authorities charged that "a Zionist organization with headquarters in Gibraltar" had arranged for the sailing of forty-three Moroccan Jews without exit visas from the Spanish Presidio port of Melilla. The Maghreb (North Africa) Arab Press Agency, which is close to the Moroccan Government, said that "the

Head Of Institute Of Foreign Trade Wrote And Spoke Against Communism

Joseph Anthony Marcus, a foreign-trade consultant who in recent years wrote and lectured on the menace of Communism, died at New York Hospital after a heart attack. He was 58 years old and lived at 231 East Fifty-third Street.

Mr. Marcus was born in Russia and came to the United States in 1910. From 1913 to 1920, he served as an interpreter, investigator, and special agent with the immigration, foreign trade and employment services of the United States Government, says the New York Times. In the early Nineteen Twenties he was reconstruction director in the Baltic countries for the Jewish Joint Distribution Committee, doing relief work in the Jewish communities.

Beginning in the mid-Twenties, Mr. Marcus became active in foreign trade, becoming the European and Soviet Union representative of the American Hair and Felt Company, and the Studebaker Corporation. He served as finance manager in South Africa for the Motor Dealers Credit Corporation and later was Russian and foreign-trade marketing specialist for the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, economic adviser for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and assistant director of the Federal Housing Administration.

Among other posts he held were those of president of the Gradian Oil Company, Inc., vice president of the Kimrock Consolidated Oil Corporation, of Denver; and director of the Russian Department of the American Radiator and Standard Sanitary Corporation. At his death he headed the Institute of Foreign Trade at 11 West Forty-second Street.

Mr. Marcus was a prolific letter writer to the New York Times and other newspapers and periodicals. His subjects covered a wide range including advocacy of noise-abatement measures, improving municipal government, birth control, the plight of German refugees during the Hitler era, and the need to substitute more newspaper coverage of the arts for news of prize-fighting.

He also wrote articles on foreign affairs for the Christian Science Monitor, The Saturday Evening Post, and American Legion Magazine, says the New York Times. After World War II, Mr. Marcus became much concerned about the spread of Communism and its danger to the free world.

veil is now lifted on Zionist action in Morocco and emigration to Israel."

The agency charged that Zionist groups, under the cover of humanitarian, cultural, or social work, were organizing the clandestine emigration of Moroccan Jews.

The tragedy has spotlighted the problem of emigration to Israel

Changing Position Of U. S. Jewry Shown By More Non-Jewish Knowledge Of Judaism

Leading American non-Jewish scholars, clergymen, and civic leaders appear to have a greater knowledge of Jews and Jewish life at the present time than they did in 1949.

This has been disclosed in a series of questions used to prepare an exhaustive two-volume study, "The Jews: Their History, Culture, and Religion," just now published by Harper & Brothers, says the New York Herald Tribune. It is edited by the Chancellor of Jewish Theological Seminary of America, Dr. Louis Finkelstein, in association with Miss Jessica Feingold, executive director of the Institute for Religious and Social Studies.

Thirteen years ago, when the first edition of the encyclopedic work was prepared, 209 American scholars in a variety of fields were asked by the editors: "What questions should be answered in the book on Judaism and the Jews?"

Their responses ranged from the general, "What is a Jew?" to the specific, "What is the attitude of Judaism toward Jews?" Some were religious ("What is the Jewish doctrine of immortality?") and others were sociological ("What is the Jewish attitude toward marriage and the family?").

Twenty-eight questions were raised so often that they were listed in both the first (1949) and second (1957) editions.

For preparations of the third edition, Miss Feingold said, an additional 2,500 leaders in academic circles and in community life were queried. Their answers resulted in fourteen added questions which, she said, are not only more knowledgeable but for the first time "shed some light on the changing position of Jews on the American scene."

Some of the new questions, which have been answered by the forty individual contributors of chapters as well as the editors, relate to recent events, such as the discovery of the Dead Sea Scrolls; the effect of World War II on Jewish communities; the plight of Jews behind the Iron Curtain; and the relation of Jews in general to Communism.

"A substantial number of the new questions appear to reflect a greater knowledge of Jews and Jewish life than did any of the 1947 questions," Miss Feingold commented. "They are based on real understanding, real knowledge. There is an increasing acceptance that this is an important religious community in America, whereas a few years ago the Jewish community was thought of as more of an immigrant group and less to be reckoned with."

Such new questions as: "Is there a religious revival among contemporary Jews?" and "What are the bases of anti-Semitism?" she observed, suggest "some familiarity with Judaism as well as with individual Jews." They also "indicate a concern in the general community which closely parallels that in the Jewish community itself."

Other questions relating to this concern are worded in this way: "What is the Jewish attitude to

Ahad Ha-Am, A Biography

REVIEWED BY DR. SIMON GREENBERG, VICE-CHANCELLOR, JEWISH THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, IN NEW YORK

The Jewish Publication Society is to be highly commended for making available at long last for English readers a well-written, readable, comprehensive and attractively printed biography of Ahad Ha-Am (Anshel Ginzberg). This autodidact, who spent the first thirty years of his life in the intellectually stifling environment of a Hasidic community in a 19th century Russian village, later comprehended more fully than anyone else in his day the profundity and the complexity of the problems implicit in the Jewish national renaissance. Blisk spoke for his generation in eastern Europe when he addressed Ahad Ha-Am as "Our Teacher," and the author of this biography speaks for thousands of Jewish university graduates of the West when he writes "he gave me a new conception of the nature and meaning of Judaism and of what is involved in being a Jew in the modern world."

Nor is there anyone better equipped than Leon Simon to deal with this theme. He knew Ahad Ha-Am intimately. While yet a young man he introduced Ahad Ha-Am to English readers by translating a number of his brilliant essays. Almost half a century ago the Jewish Publication Society published a volume of his translations together with his splendid introductory essay. And now at the age of seventy-nine Leon Simon presents us with the rich fruits of the life-long meditation of a first rate mind on a first rate subject.

Though the publication of such a volume is long overdue it is by no means too late. Indeed, it is most timely, for the basic problem which concerned Ahad Ha-Am takes on greater urgency now that a Jewish state is a reality. To his contemporaries Ahad Ha-Am seemed forever to be crossing bridges which had not yet been reached. Herzl had, with the insight and self-consuming fervor of genius, focused the mind and energy of the Zionist movement on the attainment of the political goal, the establishment of a Jewish state. To direct the attention of the Zionist organization to such problems as the spiritual renaissance of the Jewish people, the revival of the Jewish language, the relationship between the State and the Jewish Communities of the Diaspora, the place of the Jewish religion in the

Jewish War Veterans Ask Deeper Look At Hate Papers

The Jewish War Veterans of the U.S.A. called upon the U.S. Treasury Department, to look into the financing of hate groups and publications, particularly those now motivated by anti-Catholic bias, which were distributed by the millions in the current campaign, with a view to establishing whether or not tax-deductible funds are being used to finance the mailings. J.W.V. National Executive Director, Joseph F. Barr, declared in Washington that he was certain that a Treasury Department investigation would uncover evidence of statutory violations in establishing that such funds are being used for this purpose. He called attention to the several requests his organization has made without success to have Congress investigate the financing of hate groups and literature, to which Congress had not been receptive.

"If such investigation had been made," Mr. Barr said, "it would have had a deterring effect on both the volume and intensity of hate literature." J.W.V. was the first national organization to deny infection of the religious issue into the campaign. The organization had pledged that candidates must be judged on their merits. Mr. Barr said that he intended to send representations to the Post Office Department urging a stricter survey of literature going through the mails, especially material that does not go first class and can be opened for inspection. He urged the Post Office to exercise its right of inspection to determine whether or not hate literature that comes to its attention can provide an actionable case under existing libel laws.

"No one can know how despicable hate literature is better than we do," Mr. Barr said. "As an organization, we have been fighting this danger to American freedom ever since our formation in 1896. Invariably we find that hate literature against Jews is motivated by those organizations which spread hate literature against Catholics or Protestants or Negroes, as the occasion, in their judgment, requires. There is a hard corps of hate peddlers publishing this filth for a profit and our existing laws are not strong enough to combat these evil doers. We are determined that we must spur swift and forthright action to overcome the danger to all, coming from those few miserable prejudice peddlers."

Mr. Barr emphasized that by its Constitution, J.W.V. must be and is strictly non-partisan, on political issues and candidates. He pointed out that both presidential candidates had publicly expressed disgust with hate groups and publications and each had combatted this menace in the past. The Jewish War Veterans is the oldest active war veterans organization in the United States of America.

In a letter to National Commander of the Jewish War Veterans, I. L. Feuer, Assistant U.S. Secretary of State G. Lewis Jones said that a speech made by the Ambassador from the United Arab Republic to Arab exchange students agitating them to interfere in the American elections, had given the State Department "concern" which was brought to the Ambassador's attention.

Mr. Jones also pointed out that the State Department's position "with regard to the domestic character of our Presidential election" also was taken up with Iraqi authorities. In a letter to the State Department, Commander Feuer had protested the United Arab Republic Ambassador's speech and also the action of the Iraqi Foreign Minister who, in a diplomatic note to the American Embassy of ficials in Baghdad, had expressed opposition to a speech made by Senator John F. Kennedy during the presidential campaign.

ASK AROUND . . .
Remember the old auto ads that read: "Ask the man who drives one?"

The same goes for entertainment for any party you're planning, ask about what we've got to offer.

We can't list all our satisfied customers — advertising isn't cheap and we'd need a fortune to buy the space to list all those names!

Look at your TV set, too, because the entertainers you hire when you call us are all regulars on the one-eyed lantern in the living room corner.

But they like to get away from the cameras, sometimes. They'd like to play for you.

General Pershing And The Fighting Jews: A Centennial Reminder

BY STANLEY POSTAL, OF THE NATIONAL JEWISH WELFARE BOARD, IN NEW YORK

Once, at an American Legion convention in the early 1920s, the late Sam Dreben, known as "the fighting Jew" because of his valor in the Philippine insurrection, the Boxer Rebellion, and World War I, tried to crash a banquet. Two husky Marine sentries halted the Russian-born and Texas-raised soldier of fortune who had fought in Mexico, Venezuela, and Nicaragua, and informed him, none too gently, "only generals allowed."

Dreben was asking how come when a band struck up, "Hail to the Chief," as General John J. Pershing, Marshall Foch, General Diaz, and Admiral Beatty entered the hotel. Dreben snapped to attention. Pershing spotted Dreben, stopped and said to Marshall Foch: "General, I'd like you to meet one of my finest soldiers." Seeing the French decorations Dreben wore (his awards also included medals from the U.S., Italy, and Belgium), Foch embraced him. Then, as the sentries blinked in amazement, Pershing and Foch linked arms with Dreben and marched into the room reserved for "generals only."

Ex-Sergeant Edward Cohn, one of the American servicemen who remained in France after World War I, was Pershing's war-time orderly. Whenever Pershing came to France after the war, he and Cohn got together and fought the war all over again. Despite the difference in rank, a genuine friendship grew up between the two men. Sgt. Harry Epstein, a former New Yorker who settled in Arizona, was Pershing's war-time mess sergeant. Up to World War II, General Pershing had under his command the largest body of Jewish soldiers of all time. Serving under him in France during World War I were more than 150,000 American Jews whose religious and morale needs brought into being the National Jewish Welfare Board in 1917.

Responding to a Rosh Hashanah greeting in 1917 from Col. Harry Cutler, then president of JWB, Pershing cabled these words: "The stirring message of greetings from the National Jewish Welfare Board is much appreciated by the American Expeditionary Forces. The constant support and cordial assistance of our brothers of the Jewish faith and the thought that all creeds are united under one banner gives courage to our Army and urges us on to victory."

At the close of World War I, in an official message to Colonel Cutler, General Pershing expressed to JWB his praise for "the splendid services" American Jewry had rendered through JWB to the AEF. In that message Pershing said "the activities of your organization in France commenced in the summer of 1918, with the opening of a clubroom in Paris to which American soldiers, irrespective of creed, were welcomed. Handicapped by lack of personnel and facilities, your representatives, during the remaining months of hostilities, did valuable work among the soldiers of the Jewish faith and others, taking advantage of the opportunities offered by the larger welfare agencies to keep our soldiers in touch with their religion and their homes. "Since the signing of the armistice you have grasped the opportunity for increased recreational facilities, and have increased your personnel, opened additional club rooms at important centers, and shown a commendable eagerness to co-operate with the Army and the other welfare societies and to bear your full share of the responsibility for keeping up this important work until all troops can be returned to America."

Pershing's appraisal of the Jewish fighting men under his command and his vigorous support of Jewish reconstruction in post-World War I Europe were expressed in a now forgotten speech he made on December 5, 1926, before a great meeting of Catholics, Protestants, and Jews in New York's Cathedral of St. John the Divine. It was at that meeting that Pershing proposed that the Christians of America raise $25,000,000 to match the sum being sought by American Jews under the leadership of the Joint Distribution Committee for European Jewish relief and reconstruction.

In that address, General Pershing said, among other things: "Jews are an essential part of America. As citizens among us, they have always done their full part. When the time came to serve their country under arms, no class of people served with more patriotism or with higher motives than the young Jews who volunteered or were drafted and who went overseas with our other young Americans. I well remember, in my inspections of New York divisions, seeing so many patriotic, well-disciplined, well-behaved young Jewish soldiers, whose commanders spoke of them in the highest terms. During the war there was no such thing as race or creed, they were forgotten."

"During this campaign they also should be forgotten. It is for generous Americans of whatever religion, to aid the Jews of America in succoring their brethren overseas. The Jews of America have always been in the forefront of charitable works. There has never been an attempt to raise a large sum of money for a public cause in which the Jews have not done more than their share. It is up to the Christians of America to show that they appreciate what the Jews have done in the past. The spirit of this occasion appeals to me tremendously. This gathering should be the beginning of an era of good will that should spread throughout America. It is not so much a question of giving as it is of showing the proper spirit. A spirit of good-will is needed in America, today. It could have no better beginning than here in New York in this great cathedral."

"It is a difficult thing for us in our prosperous country to imagine just what suffering those poor people overseas are going through. This is an occasion for all Americans, whether Christians or what not, to show our Jewish friends that we have charitable instincts, and that there is no such thing as race prejudice in this great country. To my mind this is one of the great lessons we can teach the people of Europe by contributing to this fund."

"I was brought up as a Methodist, and the Methodists are the greatest beggars in the world. I want to hark back to my Methodism and appeal to Christian America to give much greater contributions to the Jewish fund than they have contemplated. I feel sure that this undertaking will meet with very cordial and generous response all over the country, especially if New York City gives it the right kind of start. Christians of America ought to raise at least as much as the Jews themselves are raising. Twenty-five millions are not too much for the Christians to raise to help those poor people over there. The Jews will raise their twenty-five millions all right, and if the Christians cannot duplicate it, well I don't know, I'd like to tell them what I think about them."

Five years earlier, in another address at Madison Square Garden, called to protest post-war German propaganda, General Pershing said a few things which are still timely and pertinent. Speaking of the foreign-born, he declared: "There were with me in the Philippines, in Mexico and in France thousands of foreign-born men hardly able to speak our tongue who had in their hearts the spirit of Americanism and devotion to make the supreme sacrifice. Indeed, there was often a zeal for all that America means that put to blush many older Americans who have fallen below the obligations of their birthright."

In the same vein he defended the right of naturalized Americans to maintain a continuing interest in the culture of their birthplace. "We have no quarrel," Pershing declared, "with Americans of foreign birth or stock who cling to the music, art, folklore, and the better traditions of the old land. They could be less than human, and we would be poorer, if they didn't. We recognize our obligation to all these. We want all to know that America is an inspiration, that it is something spiritual, a goal toward which we aim. If we bring together people from different lands, of different creeds and varied conditions and merge them into one America, the product will be the greatest of all nations and a race that will long hold a compelling place in the world."

That was General John J. Pershing, commander-in-chief of the American Expeditionary Force in World War I, the centennial of whose birth was proclaimed by President Eisenhower and Congress as "General of the Armies John J. Pershing Centennial Day."

Rabbi Benjamin Bak, of Baltimore, will serve as executive head or co-ordinator. The chief consultants will include Rabbi Joseph E. Soloveitchik, of Boston, a prominent Talmudic scholar; and Dr. Samuel Belkin, president of Yeshiva University.

Jewish Law requires a couple to obtain a divorce from a court composed of three rabbis if either partner wishes to marry someone else. The sole ground for a writ of "get" or divorce, under Jewish Law is mutual consent, says the New York Times. The new court, Rabbi Rackman said, will consist of three rabbis in rotation from a panel of eight or nine.

from Morocco. Ever since Morocco's independence in 1956, says the New York Times, the Government has opposed Jewish emigration to Israel on the ground that Jews had full rights and duties in Morocco.

the teaching of religion in secular or public schools? To the separation of church and state?" and "What is the occupational distribution of Jews? What is the proportion of Jews in agriculture as compared with urban pursuits?"

Miss Feingold noted that when Dr. Finkelstein undertook the first edition of the study, he characterized Judaism as "the unknown religion of our time." Increasing familiarity with Judaism on the part of non-Jewish scholars has been spurred, she said, according to the New York Herald Tribune, by such intergroup seminary-sponsored activities as the Institute for Religious and Social Studies and other recent inter-faith conversations and studies.

life of the Jewish people, the essential nature of Jewish ethics, though every thoughtful Zionist recognized their importance, was nevertheless deemed to be an unfortunate diversion of energy from the main tasks. What Ahad Ha-Am was saying was admittedly very interesting and exceptionally well said, but it was deemed in essence irrelevant to the pressing need of the hour. That hour and its pressing need has now passed and the pressing need of this hour makes Ahad Ha-Am's former irrelevances highly relevant.

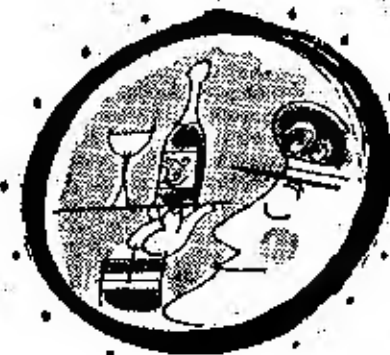

This is not to imply that Ahad Ha-Am was a cloistered philosopher. He participated fully in the inner circles of leadership of the Chovevei Zionists of Russia. He was in constant contact with Chaim Weizmann during the critical years preceding and following the issuance of the Balfour Declaration. He founded, and for a number of years edited, the Hashiloach, which, under his guidance, attained a peak of literary perfection unsurpassed since his day by any Hebrew publication. He visited Palestine on a number of occasions and published reports that still stir us by the clarity of their insights and the courage of their judgments.

Nor was Ahad Ha-Am always right either in his judgments in practical matters, or in the solutions he offered to theoretical problems. Leon Simon is not blind either to Ahad Ha-Am's human frailties or to his other limitations. But Ahad Ha-Am was always fresh, original, challenging; and he remains so for us today.

His personal life belonged to an age and an environment that have been utterly and ruthlessly destroyed. The Jewish community in which he grew to manhood was unquestionably intellectually narrow, but spiritually, unfathomably profound. The synthesis which Ahad Ha-Am achieved in his person between this spiritual profundity and European intellectualism added to the indestructible treasures of the Jewish people a soul of saintly purity and of surpassing nobility and a mind of majestic stature. The appearance of this biography is but another happy sign of the growing intellectual and spiritual maturity of the American Jewish community. Anyone who would want to experience this process of maturation would do well to read this splendid presentation of the life and thought of Ahad Ha-Am.
